How floor drains become clogged

For industrial facilities, the most common cause of a clogged floor drain is mop water that usually contains a large amount of pollutants and toxic substances that causes pipe corrosion. In addition, the daily or weekly mopping of storage and warehouse floors can bring about an accumulation of solids and sludge that clog floor drains. Manufacturing floors also become clogged from the substantial build-up of packing materials and rejected scraps that eventually find their way to the floor drain.

Commercial kitchens and restaurant floor drains become dirty and clogged over time when food particles, oil, dust, grease and other debris flow into the floor drain with dirty water. In addition, sinks overflow and dirty sink water is sometimes sloshed on the floor and flows down the floor drain. These sink overflows contain soap, detergents and other pollutants, compounding the problem of clogging, pipe corrosion and growth of bacteria which is a health and environmental hazard.

Dry cleaners, laundry shops and livery cleaning services generate a huge volume of water loaded with chemicals, soaps, detergents, hair and other solid materials that overload a floor drain and eventually clog it. Rooter Services are usually needed for these types of problems.

The Effect of clogged and damaged floor drains

The cost of clogged and damaged floor drains in these commercial and industrial facilities in terms of customer service and financial cost is quite high. The pollutants that enter the floor drains bring about floor drain and pipe corrosion that can cause pipe clogging, pipe leakage and broken or collapsed pipes. This could mean a very costly pipe repair and replacement cost. In addition, clogged floor drains can also cause a build-up of contaminated water, bacteria and germs that are health and environmental hazards. These are the reasons why regular cleaning and maintenance of floor drains is critical.
