beginning with being classically trained in jazz at the age of 9, sean hegarty, aka synap, has always been attracted to the renegade face of music. soon after discovering house music of the 1990's and hearing albums from electronic pioneers such as daft punk and the prodigy, hegarty was hooked on electronic music. not surprisingly, sean himself began creating his own form of dance music, utilizing timeless lessons learned from various eclectic styles of jazz music.

the sounds of synap have serenaded the speakers of some of the finest venues in the north east, including hudson terrace, bliss, and encore. synap's music is hard to classify into a single genre. his sound earns partial genre labels from electro, progressive, indie, jazz, trap, and hip-hop, but not anyone as a whole. sean's sound, which he labels as having "aggressive-progressive cerebral messages," (hence the name synap), has quickly grown him a loyal following. continuously pushing the normal bounds of dance music, with a string of his own personal originals, remixes, and bootlegs, as well as numerous collaborations lined up for 2013, synap is one musician you do not want to take your eyes off.
