Wisconsin has really strict gun laws; it is one of only two states that entirely forbids any individual from holding concealed tools. A loaded weapon in a car is considered a hidden tool, which is illegal. Carrying a concealed tool (including various other non-gun weapons such as knives) is a course A misdemeanor.

For some people, carrying any tool freely is not permitted under any circumstances. If anybody willingly supplies a weapon to someone who is ineligible to have one, they are subject to a felony charge. Full Statement

Other acts that are unlawful consist of possession of a weapon while intoxicated, pointing a weapon at an additional person (unless in self defense), and any sort of irresponsible handling of a tool. Despite some efforts from lawmakers, openly holding a weapon is RULED OUT disorderly conduct unless the owner is impersonating in any of the above manners.

Police policemen and military workers are exceptions to many of these policies and are normally allowed to carry hidden tools, specifically in their automobiles.
