Who referred the inspector? The very best recommendations are often times from someone you know and trust personally. On the occasion that the home inspector has not been reliably recommended to you, make certain to ask for references from past clients.

Once it comes time for the home inspection to actually be done, make a point to be there and ask questions pertaining to the sites which may need repair work. Make sure to ask questions regarding whether or not the repairs are major or minor.

Ensure to ask how long the home inspection will take. A detailed inspection should take at least 2 hours. In case your prospective inspector informs you that it will take any less time than that, beware and search for another person to carry out the job.

Look to see if the inspector is connected with any professional organizations. There are many local, state, and national organizations inspectors can join.

Ask your prospective inspector exactly what sort of report you are going to be given when the inspection has been performed. Reports differentiate between handwritten versions, checklist version, narrative versions, or computerized reports. The report should be comprehensive and then should be in your hands in just 48 hours after the inspection has been done.

In some cases the home inspector may recommend additional inspections, for example a pest or radon inspection, which may not be covered within the routine inspection.
