

Defending our Country

We are defending our country not necessarily against an invading force, but against the political and economic influence our neighbours try to force on us.

Over the past few decades, Canada has been more and more supportive of the Americans in foreign policy and internal policy. One example of how this can lead to disaster for us is the creation of Japanese internment camps. Only after pressure from the United States did the government decide to install these camps all over the country. Many died, lost their possessions, and their families. As of this year, the government has still yet to issue a formal apology for the creation of these camps.

The Americans are only where they are today because of the tricks they pulled during the World Wars, was it not Canada that was known for its brave and dependable soldiers? But which country decided to wait until the last possible moment to join the war just to reap the rewards? And after World War II, who was it that dragged us into a war we had no business in? That's right, the Americans. They make a mess and expect us to mop it up for them.

With every passing day, Canada creeps closer to upping the number of states to 63. Canadians have died for the independence we have today, it would be dishonourable to lose our sense of pride and nationalism to some Yanks. Defend Canada from American influence, defend the land your forefathers fought for.
