

OBFUSCATING the solution to a puzzle hidden in plain sight is never a simple prospect - indeed, it is very difficult to do properly. very much a factor is ensuring that a puzzle's solution is not evident encoded to a casual observer - dedicated solvers must not yet behold a solution before reflection. like anything else, deft puzzling requires practice, both to learn proper form and to intelllligently generate puzzles after years of languishment. now the execution of my craft has been approached.

Who among you will find the katabatic signal hidden amongst the noise?
