Creativity (3/5)	Appearance (4/5)	Grammar (3/10)
- Supernaturality is common in other kinds of fanfic, so I have to admit, I was kind of surprised to see what this story was actually about. - The idea is nice, though, the execution is not at all well done. - Author makes strange use of overused and overdone cliches (me vs. the world, being 'different' from everyone else but somehow still being able to relate to some people, magical powers will kill you so I can't date you cliche, etc etc). - The creativity is ok— not so bad for a cliche, I'd say. Still, the execution of the idea is poorly done.	- In my opinion, the poster's quality is very well done with the exception that you can see where the editor cropped the people out of another photo in some parts. All the same, it is a gorgeous poster and it matches the theme very well. - The description does not catch my eye personally, but I can see why some would click it. - The background matches the theme pretty well aswell— with the exception that the .gif is not seamless, so it looks kind of strange to me. Nonetheless, I still like it. - The appearance is probably the best things about this one-shot in all honesty. I really liked it.	- First looking into the story, I silently weep to myself because of the author's inability to properly capitalise titles. - I cannot say that I saw any truly descriptive words that made me feel like I was inside of the story, but the vocabulary was quite okay. - There are TONS of grammar issues here. From switching tenses, to not adding that extra "s", there they are. - No offence, and yes I said that just to be polite, but the writing reminds me of my 12 year old's sister's writing. I don't know how old you are, but I don't even think the grammar here is good for a 12 year old. You capitalised the beginning of your sentences though, so I can't say everything is wrong. - The characters were actually portrayed quite well in terms of description.

Reader's Enjoyment (5/10)	Story Overall (4/10)	Advice
- The beginning of the story was quite loathsome, taking me back to a nostalgic time when I wrote on Wattpad in my free time a few years back. Deep sighs. As I got to the end, I found myself genuinely worried about [Y/N] in the story. It wasn't so bad. - In a strange way, I do feel a longing for more chapters although I don't know exactly how I felt about the first one.	- Everything flows a bit faster than it should, which makes the story seem odd. - The plot flows in the sense that the romance advances (and rather quickly, may I add), but not in the sense that it makes and real sense at all. Nothing is explained really. - I felt like the first chapter was honestly some cruel joke because the characters all seemed to have some kind of disformia with emotions. Why are they falling in love on the first day? Isn't Chanyeol supposed to be some demonic monster that hadn't felt emotions in years? Why can he be different all of a sudden? - Even though the grammar was terrible and your ideas seemed holey to me, I did quite enjoy the one-shot. - +4 points for Chanyeol's presence	-PROTIP: When a character is stuttering, refrain from using ellipsis (the …'s)— those are for something else. Use a dash — instead. One dash, not two. Use ellipsis when trailing off and use it rarely if you have you. - Also, make sure you aren't missing words when you publicise your books lol (and also puncuation)
