

This is an app for students to help each other in a way that eliminates the stress, drama, and limitations of depending on the social framework. It's great to have helpful friends and make connections with others, but all students know what it's like to have trouble understanding a concept, reading or assignment in school and be faced with the "who do I text? Does that person consider me a friend? Have I done them enough favors to deserve to be able to ask this question?"

It's time for a tool that provides a safe, anonymous option for brief interaction between students for temporary, isolated questions-and-answers (not conversations, forums, etc).

Isn't it time that help was available in a venue that uses anonymity to neutralize the potentially blocking social aspects, while still being quick and convenient – and also encouraging selfless acts of help to others?

Better yet, this tool smartly matches your question to the best app users who may be able to answer it. Safely using your information behind the scenes (WITHOUT revealing any of it to anyone, EVER) .... The app uses things like your current grade, your current school (sometimes), the subject of your question (like Geometry, English, etc), and whether or not other app users have self-identified as being particularly knowledgeable or skilled in that specific subject ... In order to pair your question up with the other app users best positioned to answer it, and then solicits them to answer.

Users who do a great job answering questions – either by quality or a combination of quality & volume – are rated highly, may continue using the app's services, and have the option – at their discretion – of having their real identity advertised on the splash page of the app as being a STAR of a particular day, week, month or school. (We never do this without their explicit permission).

We are working on ways to make usage of the app even more meaningful to the future of student users. Coming soon, hopefully, we want to provide some option for documentation of participation in this peer-to-peer resource service so that users can (if they choose), refer to the service they provided others and document that on resumes, job or college applications, or other career- and qualification-related profiles.

KEEP USING THE APP – ITS ACCURACY ACTUALLY IMPROVES WITH MORE USE AND A LARGE USER BASE!
