RALLYE MONTE-CARLO PREVIEW 2017

WHAT'S RALLYE MONTE-CARLO LIKE?

The stages are mainly narrow mountain roads with plenty of hairpin bends, and there can be some big drops as well!

Spectators love Rallye Monte-Carlo; despite the subzero temperatures they often camp out overnight and hold stage-side parties as they watch the cars go past!

Conditions are often mixed and completely random: a stage can start off being completely dry, but then contain ice, snow, black ice, fog and sunshine. So tyre choice is always really complicated.

Monte-Carlo contains more night stages than most other events. So the cars use powerful spotlights to help them find their way. Some drivers prefer driving at night... as you can't see the big drops!

The key to Monte-Carlo? Expect the unexpected: a patch of ice or snow can appear from out of nowhere, and that often means an unexpected rendezvous with the scenery...

RED BULL TV AT MONTE-CARLO

Red Bull TV will be broadcasting live from every round of the World Rally Championship this year, with shows hosted by Mike Chen and a guest co-presenter. In Monte-Carlo, the co-presenter will be Formula 1 and Le Mans star Mark Webber.

The shows will consist of highlights coverage from each day, plus a longer live show on Saturday that will bring you thrilling action directly from the stages, as it happens. The shows will drop on the Red Bull TV app at the times shown in the box, but can be accessed at any time afterwards – meaning that you can watch the World Rally Championship at any time that suits you.

The coverage will showcase the very best of the action as well as interviews, special features, and a few out-there surprises that you can only see on Red Bull TV. Check it out on your mobile device or www.redbull.tv.
