

PCS Blacklist Rules

Introduction

These rules should not be applied literally or word by word. These rules should be applied keeping in mind what the intention of them is.

§1 Scope

These rules are part of the PCS blacklist (also referred to as simply the blacklist). Every case regarding the blacklist must follow these rules.

However, tournament administrators are free to fully or partially use the blacklist or not use the blacklist at all.

Being on the PCS blacklist does not mean one is necessarily banned on any PCS service such as the forum, the ts3 server, cs2d servers or other. (The administrators of the respective services are left to decide who gets banned and who doesn't.)

§2 Proof of an offence & execution of the PCS blacklist rules

To be punished for an offence as described by these rules, there must be sufficient proof that the accused is guilty of the offence.

The PCS does not have to actively investigate offences. If proof is provided by a third party (cs2d player, member of the PCS community or other) it must prosecute the accused accordingly.

§3 responsibility over the blacklist

The PCS management is responsible for the PCS blacklist. Changes to these rules can only be authorised by the PCS management.

§4 Crashing/attacking servers, severely disrupting the PCS

This offence must be punished by putting the guilty on the PCS blacklist forever.

§5 Cheating in a tournament match

For this offence the guilty must be put on the blacklist for 3 years.

§6 Cheating in competitive matches or on public servers

The above offence must lead to the guilty being put on the blacklist for 2 years.

Cheating on a local server (sometimes referred to as 'new game') will not be punished. However, if proof of cheating is found, the accused must prove that they cheated only in local games.

§7 Rehabilitation

For offenders prosecuted under rule §5 (Cheating in a tournament match) or rule §6 (Cheating in competitive matches or on public servers) there is the possibility of a rehabilitation.

Rehabilitation means that the offender must do a task to show their regret. This task will be set by the PCS management.

If the offender accomplishes the given task their duration on the blacklist will be reduced by 1 year.