

Top Trends in Redesigning Offices

If you are looking for architects in Cork, you need to look no further than Doyle + Partners. No matter what type of Architects cork you are looking for, you be able to get your needs served, including redesigning an office.

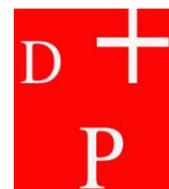

Collaborative Workspaces

When employees work together, they seem to work better. One huge trend in office workspaces is designing the workspaces that are designed to encourage diverse methods of collaboration with employees working together. With the concept of this, the employees are able to develop new ideas and move concepts forward while talking with one another throughout the day. One big trend that is being developed is the replacement of cubicles with large desks that can accommodate a number of different employees at one time. Lounge areas are allowing for more spontaneous conversations and brainstorming sessions between employees of different departments. Open workspaces help to create a sense of community with one another.

Multipurpose Spaces

Another huge trend in office spaces is the use of multipurpose spaces. Employees are going to work better if they are more comfortable with their peers. For example, you can design the dining area also as a place that employees can recharge their batteries and have a good time at it.

The area should have snacks and drinks readily available where employees can just come and take a break and talk with other employees.

Bringing Nature Indoors

Nature just seems to help people relax more. Some things that you can do to bring the nature indoors in the office are by the use of natural lighting, beautiful landscapes and plants that are located throughout the office space. Live plants in the office will help to clean the air but when they are there, employees are going to feel emotionally healthy and more focused. Exposing employees to nature can improve efficiency due to greater concentration and improved productivity. Corks architects can help you know the best ways possible to bring nature indoors.

Privacy Pods

Even though the trend is to have workspaces where employees are constantly working together, you also need to have privacy pods where employees can have a private area if they need one just to be alone if they need to have a private meeting with someone.

Company Culture

Your office design should reflect the culture of your company. You should have some of the products and achievements of the company displayed throughout the office. When you display these items, you are going to instill a sense of confidence and encourage the employees to continue to take risks to get the best results. You should also encourage employees to personalize their workspaces because it will give them a sense of identity and ownership, even though they are sharing areas with other employees.

Planning the Office Redesign

You must make sure to take time in order to completely plan out how you want your office to be redesigned, which is where an Architects cork can and will help you out. All of the planning you do is going to be time that is well spent.

Source: Click Here

