

Lets face it, these days, no one buy music anymore without the help of the internet. For this reason, today musicians are adapting various methods and techniques to promote their Indie music and make it as top indie songs.

Giving away your music for free can be a blessing instead of a curse, but I'll touch on that later on. Various online music websites and blogs these days are encouraging fans to buy music from you. Sometimes, they also help Indie artists in respect of this finance by encouraging the listener for offering different levels of donations. Although, it is quite lowest level of donation, but this will definitely add some kind of personalized touch and adds value to the fans. It's all about giving them a reason to buy, and help to set up your career as Indie artist.

Network. Network. Network. Yes, having a strong network among the fans with the help of social media and other music sites helps to break down the communication gap between Indie artist and followers, thus a strong community can be created which as a result helps in getting progress to the next level. Do you know that for establishing a strong network, today, various music bands are launching their music absolutely for free. Creating and maximizing that exposure is key to creating a following.

Being a creator of music, one thing you must know that you are in control of your own career. In short, you are in control of your own destiny. The harder you work, the better you will get chances of getting your music heard by a major label. For surviving in the indie music industry, and to make your song as top Indie song, it is essential to fly like a bird if you put in the work. You must work hard, educate yourself, and act upon the knowledge gained.

Always remember that the more that the more people you know, the more opportunities will get open up for taking. Have that belief in yourself that you are worth knowing and don't be afraid of knowledge.