

Dancing Graphic

The special graphic technique that I've invented is something related with dancing. It's an idea about uniting two different art departments together. The result of the graphic part is all about the rhythm and the moves which are people might use when they're dancing. There is no specific dancing style to use that technique. Hip-hop with sneakers, tango with high heels, tap dance with tap shoes and any kind of different styles can be used. The most important things about that style are the emotions that feet transfer to the paper.

Consequently, we can see the each differences between the creations are done by different dancing styles. For example; if we use tango to create something new, the creation will have its own soul. Because, we will see two different type of graphic styles (woman's and man's shoes) on the paper.

If required to describe it, we can use printing ink to paint subbases of the shoes. After we immobilize a paper to the ground, the person who will create can start to dance. Then we can see the pictorial shapes of the feet.
