

MINI IMPLANTS ARE THEY THE ANSWER?

Here at Implant Solutions Today, I am often asked about mini implants. They are less expensive and easier to place, so why are they not being used more often? This is actually an involved question, and I will start my answer by revealing a second name for mini implants. They are also referred to as Temporary Anchorage Devices or TADs. As both names reflect, these types of implants are small and designed to be temporarily used for movement of teeth or maintaining a denture or bridge until a proposed implant site becomes infection free or enlarged through grafting. I use mini implants myself as temporary support, but I am careful not to ask too much of them. www.implantsolutionsnow.net

Building an expensive crown, bridge, or partial on an unpredictable platform is a financial gamble. You would never want to build your house on an unstable foundation. The same holds true for replacing your teeth. The widest and longest implant your jaw and associated structures will allow is always the choice of an experienced implantologist. This approach will provide you with the most reliable replacement of your dentition. At Implant Solutions Today, I use state of the art Computed Tomography to measure the exact amount of bone each of my patients have to offer for selection of the optimal implant size, shape, and type. If unhealthy or insufficient bone is present, then I can augment the deficient area with all the latest techniques in bone grafting and soft tissue reconstruction. The good news is that the best is not always the most expensive. www.implantsolutionsnow.net
