

It is with great pleasure that I writing to highly recommend Gary Radix for the Master International Management at IAE of Toulouse. He is one of the most consistent, hardworking and motivated students I have taught this year at the University of Bristol.

Gary was one of my students for Environmental Economics for the academic year 2014/2015. This is a demanding third year course which introduces the students to new concepts and ideas on the economics of the environment. He had proven to be a conscientious and diligent student with passion for environmental economics and current contemporary issues. He was an active member in the class with his knowledge always going beyond the course material and his external reading have made his essays a joy to read. As part of the course, the students had to present on a specific environmental economics topic. Gary had cooperated with his classmates in a professional fashion and gave an excellent presentation of an empirical paper showing his rapid adaptation on the course. Gary has been punctual in attendance and submission of any work required. He has excellent oral and written communication skills which have proven to be an advantage he had developed over the last year at the University of Bristol.

Gary's last work experience during the summer of 2014, in Romania, in an organic farm business has augmented his passion for certain environmental and societal problems. The Environmental Management course at your institution will provide him further with the knowledge and skills to integrate with teams in private and public organisations and support issues of sustainability and ecological responsibility. Gary has also followed the course of 'Strategic Management' at the University of Bristol which already addressed the social and ecological responsibility of a company. His marks for the course (77 percent in a project) is a proof of his strong academic ability and passion for the subject.

Gary has the desire to be able to design and participate in the implementation of the environmental challenges that organisations face. The courses he has followed over the last three years together with his motivation will make him a strong asset at your institution. During his year at the University of Bristol, Gary followed courses such as Marketing and Organisational Theory in which he has also proven to be a very good student. Gary is adaptable and eager to learn. A Masters at your institution will be an indispensable passport to Gary's future plans. This degree will offer and thus augment the technical skills required to follow a career that Gary aims at in environmental management.

I can guarantee that Gary will be a valuable asset for your institution. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions.

Kind Regards,

Dr. Katerina Raoukka

Katerina.raoukka@bristol.ac.uk

Office 5F11, Priory Road Complex, Clifton

Bristol, BS8 1NT,

UK